Not illustrated. 1894 Excerpt: . . . she passed through untouched--the sea became smooth before her, and she left a shining track behind. . . . When she approached a little nearer we could see one man lashed to the helm, and two men forward lashed by each of the foreshrouds, and by each man a large cask standing on end. We could also see that the two men were making great exertions with their arms, as if throwing something up in the wind. The vessel had now passed the most dangerous place, and her safety seemed certain. Another half mile brought her to the beach, and her bow struck the sand. . . . The schooner was the Arno, Capt. Higgins, with twelve men, from Quero Bank, where they had been fishing. They left the bank at the commencement of the gale. He had lost all his headsails, when at daylight this...
